BIOGRAPHY

Randel Josserand

Randel Josserand has had a distinguished career as an educator, school administrator, and consultant. The majority of Mr. Josserand's work has been to lead the turnaround of underperforming schools as a building and district administrator. He has received state and national recognition for his efforts, being named a National Principal of the Year finalist in 2001. He joined the Chicago Public Schools in 2008 to provide leadership in the transformation some of the District's lowest performing schools, with responsibility for leading a team that design and implement innovative strategies to improve struggling schools. He holds advanced degrees in Educational Psychology, Educational Administration, and Counseling Psychology. Away from his professional duties, he serves on two non-profit boards that support increasing educational opportunities for students.
